Sit up straight! That's what your parents and teachers always tell you. It's not only polite, but also good for your back, digestion and alertness. Conventional wisdom held this to be an undisputed truth for many years, but sitting up straight may not be all that great for you. For one thing, sitting at a ninety-degree angle puts a lot of pressure on your back. Researchers used MRI technology to discover that sitting up straight can lead to pinched nerves and slipped disks. For anyone who must remain seated for a long time, like students or office workers, sitting at an angle of 135 degrees is best. That's because this position puts the least amount of pressure on your back and best preserves the shape of the bones in your back. Researchers suggest leaning back slightly and putting a small pillow behind your back.

32. What is not mentioned as a reason why people have tried to sit up straight?
(a) They were always told to do so by their parents and teachers.
(b) The food you ate could travel through your body more easily.
(c) It was supposed to be better for the health of your back.
(d) It's simply more natural for people to sit up straight.
33. What has new research discovered about sitting up straight?
(a) If you sit up straight, you will concentrate more on what you do.
(b) People who sit improperly will change their positions at last.
(c) It is becoming easier for your back to absorb the pressure.
(d) It can lead to conditions that are bad for your back.
34. What angle do the researchers suggest people sit at?
(a) 90 degrees (b) 120 degrees (c) 135 degrees (d) It depends.
35. What is recommended as something to use when you are sitting?
(a) A back pillow
(b) A cushion for your head
(c) A hard chair
(d) A footrest
